SQUIRREL STOPS A VILLAGE FROM GOING TO THE LOO

By MIRROR REPORTER

CAREFULLY, a squirrel built up her winter store of nuts . . . and cut off a village from its loos.

The larder was in a switch box on top of a pole carrying electricity cables in the Elham Valley, near Folkestone, Kent.

The pile of nuts caused the box to short-circuit.

There was a blinding flash and the squirrel was electrocuted.

All the lights in the valley went out and an electric pump taking water to the hillside village of Rhodes Minus stopped working.

Serious

For four and a half hours the village had no water . . . and no one could visit the loo.

in fright of his face. His new LP has a cover photo of 21 nude women, snapped by David Montgomery, who also photographs the Queen.

But this bombast - aural and visual - cannot hide a fantastic virtuosity of guitar playing. The guitar speaks - unmistakably and unashamedly - of a pent-up violence and anger, felt by Hendrix's entire generation. Listen also to the stabbing, choking, breathless pounding of 'Magic Bus'. Stravinsky's Symphony in 7 Movements has got nothing on this - relentless, cursing, rhythmic violence, right, fearful.

THIS MISTAKEN and UNHAPPY NOTION that a man is an enduring unity; man consists of a multitude of souls, of numerous selves. This seferation paves for madness. Science has invented the...

Colonel's daughter weds a hippy

THE COLONEL'S daughter plumped for a hippy wedding yesterday.

Caroline Barras, 19-year-old daughter of Colonel John Barras, Commanding Officer of Bowington Camp, Dorset, wore green shoes and a borrowed blue-spotted dress.

Bridegroom Barry Thompson, a corporation grass cutter, sported a giant blue paper flower on a tattered jacket and a borrowed blue-spotted dress.

Anxious to be first in the queue for tickets for a concert by the Rolling Stones my friend and I left the house at 3 a.m. to make our way to the theatre.

We were stopped by a policeman who was to our disgust ignorant of what or who the Stones were.

And so we settled ourselves on the steps of the theatre. Ten minutes later the policeman reappeared on a bicycle and drew from the saddlebag a vacuum flask of hot, steaming tea. It was lovely. And, by the way, we got our front row seats. —(Miss) ROSALIND BRADICK, Codgards Avenue, Chingford.

The Miss United Kingdom and subsequent Miss World title brought a total of £3,500 in cash prizes together with a full complement of lucrative promotional associations with firms as varied in their produce as the International Wool Secretariat on one hand and the mammoth Chrysler Corporation on the other. From "Pure Wool" to 7 litre saloon cars the "critical path" descends into more permanent and serious pursuits: the next step, according to agent Larthe, is a film test with Hollywood producer Hal Wallis: after that, who knows, the world may be hers to keep.

For months now a steady degeneration has been taking place in the morals and customs of the British people. It has reached a point where it is almost unbelievable. The average man and woman in the city.

But it has come as a considerable shock to thousands of foreign visitors, who cannot believe that such things could be seen in what was once a proud

■ Congratulations to Mayor Daley and the Chicago police on their tough handling of the yippies, Vietnams and newsmen. If more mayors and police departments had the courage to crack down on those who carry only the flag of our enemies and newsmen who consistently slant their coverage of events in favor of those who would undermine and disrupt our country, there would be greater freedom for the majority of Americans rather than greater lawlessness for the few.

It is a tragedy that such individuals are allowed to cringe behind our constitutional guarantees after they have wreaked destruction by their agitation.

'Cured by Cannabis'

ACTOR Robin Anthony Culver wanted to protest against cannabis res. n being designated a dangerous drug. So he walked into a police station with some in h s hand, declared it was not a drug but a stimulant . . . and was promptly arrested.

At West London court yesterday he told magistrate Mr. E. R. Guest "I was virtually an alcoholic. Cannabis has cured me of nervous eroticism, depression and fits of violence."

"I believe that cannabis can be of positive benefit to mankind," he went on.

"The law of this country has to be obeyed," said Mr. Guest. "But I have no fear you will do yourself any harm."

He gave Culver, aged 26, of no fixed address, a two-year conditional discharge.

THE HEATHEN CHINEE.

When the time comes for China to be divided among the nations, a great slice of it, the middle slice, will naturally be passed on to the beneficent rule of England; that is, the whole of the Yangtze Valley, possibly all the rich province of Szechuen, and a considerable chunk of the misty mountains of Yunnan, will belong to the Queen. I don't know whether the Chinaman will like it—indeed, I don't know if he will mind it. Last year, when I was attempting to go on a tour, I found that I was being kept out of the heart of China, when actually I was walking across it. I went sham-bung across this region that is ultimately to be part of her Majesty's dominions.

One afternoon, I was strolling through the crowded, higgledy-piggledy, noisy, dirty streets of Yunnan-sen, arousing derision from the mob at my tight-fitting cycling-clothes, and striking terror into the hearts of all the little pig-tailed boys with my struggling red beard when in a curiosity-shop—for I have always had a keen scent for curios—I actually found for sale a half-crown piece. I turned it over with a glass for the sight was like a picture of home. "This is a curious thing," I said. "Yes, it is," said the long-fanged old heathen who wanted to sell it. "Who is that?" I asked, pointing to the figure of the Queen. "I don't know," answered the dealer, "but I've been told it's the Queen of a far-off country where there are only women."

He was pretty ignorant, was that Chinaman, but he was no more ignorant than other future subjects of her Majesty that I came in contact with. A Chinaman has the concept of a newly made Alderman.

PLAYBOY Will we be able to find a deep meaning or fulfillment, either as individuals or as a species, as long as we continue to live with the knowledge that all human life could be snuffed out at any moment in a nuclear catastrophe?

KUBRICK: We must, for in the final analysis, there may be no sound way to eliminate the threat of self-extinction without changing human nature; even if you managed to get every country disarmed down to the bow and arrow, you would still be unable to lobotomize either the knowledge of how to build nuclear warheads or the perversity that allows us to rationalize their use. Given these two categorical imperatives in a disarmed world, the first country to amass even a few weapons would have a great incentive to use them quickly. So an argument might be made that there is a greater chance for some use of nuclear weapons in a totally disarmed world, though less chance of global extinction; while in a world armed to the teeth, you have less chance for some use—but a great chance of extinction if they're used.

If you try to remove yourself from an earthly perspective and look at this tragic paradox with the detachment of an extraterrestrial, the whole thing is totally irrational. Man now has the power in one mad, incandescent moment, as you point out, to exterminate the entire species—our own generation could be the last on earth. One miscalculation and all the achievements of history could vanish in a mushroom cloud, one misstep and all of man's aspirations and strivings over the millennia could be terminated. One short circuit in a computer, one lunatic in a command structure and we could negate the heritage of the billions who have died since the dawn of man and abort the promise of the billions yet unborn—the ultimate genocide. What an irony that the discovery of nuclear power, with its potential for annihilation, also constitutes the first tottering step into the universe that must be taken by all intelligent worlds. Unhappily, the infant-mortality rate among emerging civilizations in the cosmos may be very high. Not that it will matter except to us; the destruction of this planet would have no significance on a cosmic scale to an observer in the Andromeda nebulae, the sign of our extinction would be no more than a match flaring for a second in the heavens, and if that match does blaze in the darkness, there will be none to mourn a race that used a power that could have lit a beacon in the stars to light its funeral pyre. The choice is ours.

"I Speak . . . for the Dignity of Man"

This dignity cannot be found in a man's possessions. It cannot be found in his power or in his position. It really rests on his right to be treated as a man equal in opportunity to all others. It says that he shall share in freedom, he shall choose his leaders, educate his children, provide for his family according to his ability and his merits as a human being. To apply any other test—to deny a man his hope because of his color or race, or his religion, or the place of his birth—is not to deny America."

We were fashioned to live in Paradise, and Paradise was destined to serve us. Our destiny has been altered, that this has also happened with the destiny of Paradise is not stated.
